July 25, 2023	1. Intangible Cultural Heritage – Hong Kong-style Milk Tea Making Technique Hong Kong-style Milk Tea Making Technique was inscribed onto the first Representative List of the Intangible Cultural Heritage of Hong Kong in 2017. Hong Kong-style milk tea is a much-loved beverage among the Hong Kong locals. It is also known as “silk-stocking milk tea” because the white cloth bag used to filter out tiny tea leaves was stained with the colour of tea and turned brown after being used repeatedly, resembling a silk stocking. Hong Kong-style milk tea is the outcome of a century-old evolution from English milk tea, which takes a few steps to make, such as blending tea leaves, boiling the tea, infusing the tea, force-pouring the tea, force-pouring the milk, etc. The tea-making technique does not only epitomise the fusion and development of Hong Kong’s East-meets-West food culture, but also gives a glimpse of how locals live and eat. Hongkong Post issues a set of special stamps on the theme of “Hong Kong-style Milk Tea Making Technique” to promote this intangible cultural heritage of Hong Kong, in the hope that this traditional craftsmanship can pass down the generations.
