In response to the public’s demand for connecting Hung Hom to the To Kwa Wan promenade and converting the vehicular access of the To Kwa Wan Preliminary Treatment Works into a public space, my colleagues and I used our best efforts at every stage from design to construction.

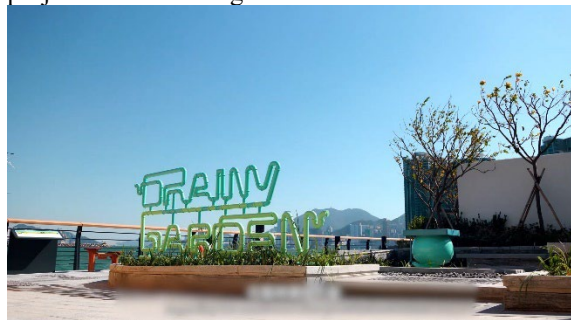

Subsequent to multiple rounds of public consultation conducted by us, the project incorporated a lot of beautification and green elements, including zero irrigation system, wind energy, local vegetation and environmentally friendly building materials. We successfully transformed the promenade into a multi-purpose public space within the target time frame.

Lau discussed the reconstruction project with his team members.

A member of the public complained about the sharp screeching noise caused by roller skaters at night when they braked abruptly. To handle the complaint, my team and I paid home visits to the residents, deployed more staff to patrol the roller skating rink, formulated a solution with reference to the advice of the Environmental Protection Department and the Hong Kong Police Force, and commissioned a consultant to install temporary acoustic screens to further block the noise from the rink.

We also enlisted the Kwun Tong District Office of the Home Affairs Department to help collect views in the neighbourhood on changing the opening hours of the roller skating rink, and successfully gained its support for the implementation of the relevant measures.
