4. Aviation Development in Hong Kong

Hong Kong's airport plays an indispensable role in the successful development of Hong Kong into an international aviation hub. The passenger terminal of Kai Tak Airport was completed and commenced service as early as in the 1960s. In view of the growing demand of air traffic, Kai Tak Airport completed its historical mission in 1998 as the Hong Kong International Airport relocated from Kai Tak to Chek Lap Kok. At present, it has developed a three-runway system. Besides, the Government of Hong Kong Special Administrative Region is pressing ahead with the "Airport City" development strategy. Hongkong Post will issue a set of special stamps on the theme of "Aviation Development in Hong Kong" to feature the thriving aviation development in the city.
